Ministry Burnout

How to help Pastors, Leaders, and Volunteers relight the fire for ministry in the post-covid church.

Rev. Don Robinson

This session will focus on discovering the burnout that exists in a post covid church and the effects it has on pastors, church leaders and volunteers. From mental health issues such as anxiety, depression, lack of energy, to pastors leaving the ministry, church leaders no longer willing to serve and a significant reduction in volunteers. It will also examine the often-forgotten tech team volunteers/staff who were called upon greatly during this time who continue to feel overworked, underappreciated, pushed aside and now are leaving their positions. Together we will review the research and assess our current “burn out levels, discuss solutions and discern practical ways we can improve our mental health and care for all those that serve our church so we can relight the fire for ministry!
As many as 20% of congregations are facing pastor retirement or resignations as a result of the Covid pandemic and political polarization. Hasty problem solving through a quick search can lead to the next pastor becoming an unintentional interim. What work is required to make healthy choices as we face this uncertain future? This workshop builds on emotional systems theory and practical application for anxious congregations.
Adaptive Leadership

Trevor James, PhD

We live in a changing world. The Church is also changing. Responding to a post-Covid-19 pandemic requires change. Leadership needs to adapt and change. What may have worked for church leaders in the past may no longer work as churches adjust to changes in attendance, volunteer participation, its financial base, and hybrid worship services including both in person and online participation. In their books, “Leadership on the Line,” and “The Practice of Adaptive Leadership,” authors, Ronald A. Heifetz, Marty Linsky, and Alexander Grashow, (Harvard Business School Press, © 2002, 2009), describe a process of moving away from merely offering “technical solutions” in leading, to responding “adaptively” to the challenges confronting institutions and organizations. One aspect of the responding “adaptively” is to “get on the balcony” and to look and listen to the deep, core issues confronting individuals and organizations. This workshop will explore the need for adaptive leadership, providing a framework and tools for church leaders to respond to the changing needs of their congregations and communities.
Church Board Governance

Gianfranco Farruggia, PhD

This workshop examines best practices in governance from the nonprofit world. It examines the history of nonprofit governance as well as the compliance and strategic role of boards and how to apply to churches. Various problematic and tricky issues of transparency, strategic thinking, church boards seeing the “big picture”, and dealing with volatility, uncertainty, complexity, and ambiguity (VUCA) will be addressed.
If you build it: Strategies for empowering faith formation

Kathleen E. Murphy, MSW, PhD, MLIS

The term faith or spiritual formation has been used in many Christian contexts yet can carry different meanings in theory and in practice. This workshop will explore formation from various perspectives in the context of overall church structure and mission. There will be a brief discussion of the definitions, theological foundations, and the goals of formation. Kathleen will then provide a more detailed discussion of the elements of spiritual formation and strategies for addressing the opportunities and challenges of an overarching formation plan in the life of the church. Using a multi-church collaboration called “Sacred Ground,” (a race and faith curriculum by the Episcopal Church) as an exemplar, this workshop will explore how to create an environment that engages, empowers and challenges people of faith individually, collectively and in community. This workshop is not about curriculum development; rather it is about faith formation anchored in the context of baptismal covenant.
