COURSE DESCRIPTION

Each degree-seeking student is required to participate in an approved tangible cross-cultural experience. Students are also encouraged to foster cross-cultural competence through ministry and campus activities, and diverse interpersonal and professional relationships. This one-day reflection module addresses the many cultural dimensions that influence our individual and communal narratives. Such cultural intersections may include race, ethnicity, gender, age, socio-economic, education, as well as organizational culture and not limited to these descriptions. Diversity permeates every aspect of our personal and professional lives, which can be enriching and anxiety producing. These intersections, that can be conflictual because of differences, assumptions, and bias reactions can be learning opportunities that foster intercultural development. Furthermore, the technical age is expeditiously advancing multicultural ministry contexts locally and abroad. The intent of this course is reflective, experiential, and formational.

COURSE PRE-REQUISITE

1. Complete the first of two Intercultural Development Inventory (IDI) assessments.
2. Debrief your IDI profile with a Qualified Administrator (QA)
3. Complete the first draft of your Intercultural Development Plan (IDP)
4. Prepare a Case Study of an intercultural experience.
5. Watch the following Ted Talk prior the day of the module:

COURSE OBJECTIVES

1. Create a plan that will assist in student self/other awareness and continued development during and beyond seminary.
2. Demonstrate engagement in cohort learning, which fosters intercultural competence and sensitivity, and nurture relationships/collegiality that may continue post seminary.
3. Analyze individual/communal experiences as part of Christian discipleship and formation.
4. Understand intercultural experiences through the lens of the Kingdom of God.
5. Evaluate power dynamics in intercultural experiences.

CASE STUDY INSTRUCTIONS

A case study is a written account of an intercultural experience. It should include conflict, misunderstandings, assumptions, etc... The focus of the case study should be on the writer, including his/her perceptions, presumptions, and personal cultural values. It is also open-ended and unbiased in reporting the situation, and it leaves the readers with a situation that prompts questions. Critical questions may be raised after the case material has been presented, but the case should not be resolved as such in the written account. This will allow for group discussion to clarify critical issues, attain self-awareness, acknowledge diverse points of view, and enhance the individual growth of group members.

Read and complete your Intercultural Development Plan (IDP) pages 1-7 before developing your case study. The questions asked in the IDP will help you identify an incident or experience that you would like to process in this cohort learning group. For example:

- Reading step one may help you to identify a situation or experience where you realize that you were not a cultural adept or competent as you believed.
- Reading step two may help you identify cultural experiences you may not have had opportunities to process or reflect upon.
- Read step three which provides some guiding questions to assist you in developing goals. Is there an intercultural incident or experience that shaped the goals you have chosen?
- Step four helps you to identify stress points. Is there an intercultural situation or experience where your stressor points were most prominent?

Your case study should be 1 – 2 pages. The case may be read by the presenter, or role played or presented as a verbatim (see below). Bring five copies for the rest of your group to follow along. Documents will be shredded after the course to destroy confidential information.

The following components need to be included in the case study:

- Who was involved? State the people who were involved specifically identify culture, race, & gender.
- What happened? Give important background information on the situation so that the reader will understand the larger context.
- What do you think were the cultural conflict/differences present?
- What internal processing took place for you or how did the people respond?

Role playing and writing a verbatim is another option for presenting your case. Sometimes recreating an experience is helpful in reflection and learning. If you are interested in writing a verbatim or having your case role played by your cohort, feel the freedom to do so following the process defined below.

THE VERBATIM WRITE UP

1. INTRODUCTION

- Summarize here what information you have learned about the person(s) and situation before the conversation.
- Describe the person(s), situation and occasion giving such data as person's race, age, gender, religious affiliation.

2. OBSERVATIONS

- Such observations are clues as to how to proceed.

3. ASSUMPTIONS FROM OBSERVATION AND YOUR FEELINGS GOING INTO THE CONVERSATION
 - Did you feel comfortable, angry, or anxious as you began?
4. PURPOSE/FOCUS
 - State what you hope to learn about yourself, ministry in general, and why you are choosing to present this verbatim.
5. THE VERBATIM
 - Give a verbatim account of what took place, not only the conversation but also incidents, embarrassments, pauses, interruptions and such details as they occurred during the conversation. An example of a written verbatim:
Matt: Good morning Ms. Brown, how are you?
Ms. Brown: Not so good.
Matt: Oh? (I really didn't want to know why she was not doing so well, so I answered in a non-interested manner)
Ms. Brown: You that religious group we are renting our church space to?
Matt: Uh hum.
Ms. Brown: I just don't like sharing our kitchen space with them.

INCOMPLETE GRADES

Overscheduling and/or lack of self-discipline are not considered extenuating circumstances. If the request is timely and meets the criteria, student and instructor will submit the incomplete grade form and the grade for that class will be listed as "I" until the last day of the following semester. If coursework is not submitted by the last day of the following semester the listing of "I" will automatically be changed to "F."
